Q100	Short for malicious software, this could steal personal information from a computer or phone.	In 2021 they were: 1,2,3,4,5,6 and 1,2,3,4,5,6,7,8,9.	Examples include Instagram, TikTok, YouTube and WhatsApp.	Stealing, then using another's personal identifying information, for financial gain.	A word or phrase preceded by a symbol, used on social media websites and apps.
Q200	Repeated unwanted, aggressive behavior that involves a power imbalance.	At least 7 characters, upper and lower case letters, numbers, and symbols are recommended.	Building your community on social media by adding people you know and trust.	Not a fingerprint, this data is gathered about you through activity online.	Controlling the personal information you share and access to your online actions.
Q300	This isn't for salmon or halibut, but an attempt from thieves to steal personal information.	Use this website or app to help save and organize passwords.	Do this and the specific person will not be able to find you in a search or start a conversation.	Illegal acts using digital devices, networks, and the internet.	Your social media posts and interactions show this to others.
Q400	Shortened to LBS, mobiles devices can use this to track your whereabouts in real time.	Just like a laptop or tablet, mobile phones need this to be secure and safe.	You see their content in your "feed," but they don't see yours.	Abbreviated PPI, your birthday, driver's license, and bank account numbers are all examples.	Information collected without the user being aware; such as clicks, number of times a site is visited, or the IP address used.

Q500	The good guys, these ethical hackers uncover system vulnerabilities.	Along with a password, this additional step is needed to gain access to a program or website.	Limit who can access your social media profile with these controls.	In 2021.Ariana Grande, Dwayne Johnson and Kylie Jenner were among the top ten of these on Instagram.	A process or set of rules to be followed in calculations or other problem-solving operations, especially by a computer.
